++ Valid for broadcast at 0858

Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
It is a bright start for many. However, it will become cloudy over Scotland through the day, with some light rain possible here later. Otherwise, most places will be dry with variable cloud. The best of the sunshine will be across southern parts, feeling warm here. Rain developing in the far north overnight, otherwise it is dry with clear spells.

Outlook for Monday and Tuesday:

Rain across the northwest will spread slowly southeast-wards during Monday, though much of southern, central and eastern parts will remain dry and very warm. This rain will continue southeast-wards on Tuesday. Warm in the far southeast, but cooler conditions following.
