

Forecast For The United Kingdom
Issued by Met Office Exeter
at 0700 on Thursday 24 Jun 2010

++ Valid for broadcast at 0858

Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
A bright and mainly dry day with sunny spells for most, but also a fair amount of cloud around, especially in northern and western parts with perhaps an odd shower around. Feeling warm again, especially in the south. Overnight should become largely dry for most with clear spells, but with some murky conditions around western areas.

Outlook for Friday and Saturday:

It should be largely dry, bright and very warm across most of the UK on Friday, with only an outside chance of a shower in a few places. Similar on Saturday, but with more in the way of showers for Scotland and Northern Ireland.

(C) Crown Copyright 2010. Published by the Met Office.