++ Valid for broadcast at 0858

Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
A day of sunshine and heavy, thundery showers. These are most likely across the northwest, where they may merge into more persistent rain in places during the afternoon. It should then become predominantly dry this evening, although further rain is likely to spread across Northern Ireland later in the night. It will be breezy throughout across northwestern parts.

Outlook for Tuesday and Wednesday:

The theme of sunshine and showers will continue. These showers will be mainly across central and northwestern parts of the UK, with some southeastern parts remaining dry. Temperatures will be around average and it will continue to be breezy across the north.
