++ Valid for broadcast at 0858

Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
Many parts will enjoy a fine day with sunny spells and hot or very hot temperatures. Despite this, isolated thunderstorms may develop that may become more widespread across northern England and Scotland later. These will move north overnight with largely dry weather elsewhere before showers push across some southern areas later. The warm and muggy conditions will continue for all.

Outlook for Thursday and Friday:
Showery rain across England will clear through Thursday morning with sunnier and fresher conditions following but with showers across the north. Friday will be fine at first before heat and humidity builds from the south with storms pushing north later.
