Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
Chilly, breezy and quite sunny over many parts, although showers will still occur across parts of eastern England until late afternoon. Cloudy over northwest Scotland, and this cloud will spread to much of Scotland and Northern Ireland by evening, with rain developing in the far northwest.

Outlook for Wednesday and Thursday:

Wednesday generally cloudy over much of the U.K., and milder in the north, also with occasional drizzly rain in the west, mainly over hills. Mainly cloudy, mild and rather windy on Thursday, with a band of heavier rain spreading across northern parts in the morning, and then further south through the afternoon and evening.
