++ Valid for broadcast at 0858

Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
Skies will turn increasingly cloudy in the south of the UK, with prolonged and sometimes heavy rainfall in western parts through the morning, reaching the east by evening. It'll be drier and brighter further north, with the odd shower possible. Overnight, rain will continue across the south, but it'll be chilly further north with clear spells.

Outlook for Tuesday and Wednesday:

Rain will ease in the south tomorrow, but it'll stay mostly cloudy with some brighter spells developing. Thicker cloud will spread into Northern Ireland and south-west Scotland, with rain arriving later in the evening. Further showers are likely on Wednesday, particularly in the north.
