++ Valid for broadcast at 0858

Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
Northern Ireland, much of Scotland, and parts of northern England will be rather cloudy with occasional showers today and tonight, and more persistent rain in the far northwest. Elsewhere, after a chilly start, fog will slowly clear, leaving plenty of sunny spells today followed by a largely clear night with mist or fog patches forming.

Outlook for Saturday and Sunday:

The far northwest will remain fairly cloudy with further showers or longer spells of light rain this weekend. Elsewhere, apart from the odd shower it'll be mostly dry with some sunny spells. However an easterly breeze will be blowing bringing a chilly feel to many.
