Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
Scattered heavy and thundery showers across southern and some central parts, with localised flooding possible. Rather warm and humid. Further heavy rain in eastern Scotland with severe gales in the far northeast. Drier in much of northwest Britain. Showery rain will become confined to the east overnight. Becoming largely dry and fresher in the west.

Outlook for Wednesday and Thursday:
Further spells of rain, heavy at times, across some eastern fringes of the UK will gradually clear away into the North Sea during Wednesday. Drier and brighter elsewhere. Cooler and fresher. Thursday will be largely dry and bright for many places. Turning chilly overnight.
