++ Valid for broadcast at 0858

Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
England and Wales will be warm and mostly dry today with sunny periods. Cloud and light rain will affect the far south at first. Showers are likely in Scotland, some heavy and thundery, with a few showers in northern England and Northern Ireland. Showers will mostly die out overnight, though a few will linger in north-west Scotland.

Outlook for Monday and Tuesday:

The south will be humid on Monday but mostly dry with some bright spells developing. However, persistent rain will affect some central areas. Northern parts will be fresher with some more showers. There will be sunshine and showers on Tuesday.
