++ Valid for broadcast at 0858

Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
A rather cloudy day across the north of the UK, whilst further south sees some bright spells and a scattering of showers. Outbreaks of rain will affect eastern coastal sites, combined with some strong winds. Overnight, rain will turn thundery in parts of East Anglia, whilst the rest of the country stays largely dry with variable amounts of cloud.

Outlook for Friday and Saturday:

Rain will clear eastern parts on Friday, meanwhile elsewhere it stays dry with variable amounts of cloud, with the best of the brightness in southwest. Turning drier as high pressure builds from the west into the weekend, but feeling rather cool.
