++ Valid for broadcast at 0858

Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
It'll be rather cloudy across the UK with only limited brighter spells.
Intermittent outbreaks of rain will spread eastwards throughout with isolated heavier bursts possible, but perhaps turning drier and brighter across some western parts later. It will then stay cloudy overnight, with patchy hill fog and further outbreaks of rain.

Outlook for Tuesday and Wednesday:
Clouds will break during Tuesday with brighter or sunny spells developing. Further showers are then likely, perhaps heavy at times and with the risk of thunder in the east. It then stay unsettled on Wednesday with further rain across the north and southeast, with showers and brighter intervals elsewhere.
