++ Valid for broadcast at 0858

Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
Bright and breezy with sunny spells and scattered showers, these mainly towards the north and west, where there could be the odd heavy one. Many southern and eastern areas having a lot of dry fine weather. Overnight, rain in the far northwest will become heavy and persistent for northwest Scotland. Southern areas remain dry with clear spells.

Outlook for Wednesday and Thursday:

Further rain for the northwest on Wednesday, otherwise a dry and bright morning, but increasingly cloudy through the afternoon with isolated showers developing, mainly in the west. Cloud and rain moving slowly southward on Thursday, generally weakening as it does so.
