

Forecast For The United Kingdom
Issued by Met Office Exeter
at 0700 on Thursday 02 Apr 2015

++ Valid for broadcast at 0858

Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
Fine across central and eastern Britain today but cloud and rain across the west and southwest will edge slowly eastwards. There will be extensive hill fog across southwestern parts of England and Wales, and it will feel cold under the cloud. Rain, heavy at times, will slowly move east overnight, with a little hill snow across northern England and Scotland.

Outlook for Friday and Saturday:

After a damp start on Friday it should become drier through the day with a few sunny intervals possible across western parts of the UK. Saturday should be mainly dry and cloudy with light winds but it should feel milder.
