

Forecast For The United Kingdom
Issued by Met Office Exeter
at 0700 on Tuesday 28 Sep 2010

++ Valid for broadcast at 0858

Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
A cloudy and mild start for most with a chance of light rain throughout the day, although some drier and brighter periods are likely in the south. A southerly breeze will develop in the west, with further spells of rain moving eastwards during the afternoon from Northern Ireland and into western Britain.

Outlook for Wednesday and Thursday:

On Wednesday, occasionally heavy rain will continue to move eastwards, with drier and brighter conditions following into western areas. Then, a few scattered showers may develop later for Northern Ireland. It should turn drier and brighter for eastern areas by Thursday, but showery rain returning in the west.

(C) Crown Copyright 2010. Published by the Met Office.