++ Valid for broadcast at 0858

Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
Most places will be rather cloudy this morning with outbreaks of rain in the east soon clearing. However, generally drier and brighter conditions will move in from the west, with a risk of a few showers. A largely dry night to come with clear spells and light winds. A few showers will continue, mainly across western parts of the UK.

Outlook for Sunday and Monday:
There will be a mixture of sunny spells and scattered showers for most on Sunday and Monday. Showers will be most frequent in the north and west, some heavy with a risk of thunder especially during Sunday afternoon and evening.
