After a chilly start on Wednesday, skies will cloud over across the south with showery outbreaks of rain spreading into the southeast. However, it will be dry and bright in the north, with plenty of sunshine on offer. It will feel warm in the northwest, but a northeasterly breeze will make it feel quite cool along the east coast.

Outlook for Thursday and Friday:

Cloudy skies will persist in the south on Thursday and Friday, but there will be some bright spells around too. Many places will stay dry, but there will be some patchy outbreaks of rain at times in parts of the south.
