++ Valid for broadcast at 0858

Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
Tuesday will be another fine day across the majority of the UK with some warm sunshine which may turn hazy at times. However, it will become very warm and increasingly humid through the day, from the south. This will lead to heavy and thundery showers pushing north across England and Wales overnight with some torrential downpours and hail possible.

Outlook for Wednesday and Thursday:

Wednesday will be warm and humid, with thundery showers for many parts. Rain will then move east overnight bringing fresher conditions to all areas. There will then be a drier interlude on Thursday, before further rain arrives in the northwest later.
