++ Valid for broadcast at 0858

Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
A wet start for central and eastern parts this morning with rain gradually clearing away to the northeast. Brighter elsewhere with sunny spells and the odd shower, though further rain and strengthening winds will spread across the southwest later. Patchy rain for some this evening. Otherwise, becoming windy overnight with another band of rain extending across most parts by dawn.

Outlook for Thursday and Friday:

Thursday and Friday will see further spells of rain spread across much of the UK, and even some showers too. It will be windy as well, with coastal gales in the west, though some brightness is possible at times too.
