Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
Early low cloud in the east will readily retreat to the coast this morning to leave many areas with a fine and dry day. It will be warm in the sunshine but this will trigger some isolated heavy and thundery showers which will develop during the afternoon across northern and eastern parts.

Outlook for Tuesday and Wednesday:
It will remain generally fine and warm into the middle of the week with any early morning cloud clearing into the North Sea once more. However with the heat from the day it is likely there will be some scattered heavy and thundery showers in places.
