++ Valid for broadcast at 0858

Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
Bands of heavy rain will continue to affect some eastern and northeastern parts of the UK, otherwise most places will become drier and brighter from the west today. It will feel fresher too. Rain will eventually clear the far northeast overnight leaving most places dry with clear spells and just the occasional shower. Chillier than of late with fog patches.

Outlook for Thursday and Friday:

Most places will be dry with some sunshine on Thursday but isolated showers will develop, mainly across parts of western Britain. It will stay dry for most on Friday but with a chance of rain across the northwest later on.
