Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
Heavy thundery rain will slowly clear away from the far north of Scotland through the morning. Dry and sunny elsewhere, perhaps a few thundery showers in the far southeast first thing, and Northern Ireland later in the day. Very warm in the south and east, but it will be turning fresher in the west.

Outlook for Sunday and Monday:
Mostly dry with sunny spells for many on Sunday, and feeling much fresher than of late. Meanwhile, there will be some showers in the west, possibly be heavy and thundery at times. Mostly dry to start Monday, but rain will spread in from the west later.
