++ Valid for broadcast at 0858

Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
Bands of showery rain will move quickly eastwards today, with some heavy outbreaks. It'll become windy in the south and in the Northern Isles, with coastal gales, but there will be some sunny spells too. Tonight will be mostly dry, but there'll be a few showers in the northwest, and then rain in the southwest later.

Outlook for Monday and Tuesday:

We could see some heavy outbreaks of rain in the southwest on Monday morning, otherwise it'll be largely dry and bright, but then showers are likely in the afternoon. It will stay unsettled into Tuesday too, with rain arriving from the west.
