Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
Mist and fog will clear to leave another fine day for many with further warm sunshine. It will be cloudier in the far north though with some light rain perhaps. Northwestern parts will also be cloudier than of late and noticeably cooler across much of Scotland. Clear skies tonight, away from the northwest, mean it'll be chilly and foggy again.

Outlook for Saturday and Sunday:

The weekend may be a little cloudier than earlier this with temperatures down a degree or two, but it should stay dry for much of it with some warm sunshine. However, rain will push into the southwest overnight into Monday.
