++ Valid for broadcast at 0858

Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
Heavy rain across eastern areas will move north through Wednesday to affect northern areas through the afternoon. Elsewhere, any fog and low cloud will clear to leave a drier and sunnier day with only scattered showers. Whilst the rain across northern areas will clear overnight, another spell of wet and windy weather will push east, reaching western parts by dawn.

Outlook for Thursday and Friday:

The unsettled conditions will continue as further wet and windy spells are interspersed with drier and brighter interludes across the country. Despite this, it will remain mild or very mild for the time of year both by day and night.
