Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
Persistent and often heavy rain will slowly move eastwards today, with very strong winds for many. Sunny spells and gusty showers will follow in from southwest, perhaps with hail and thunder for Northern Ireland, Wales and central and southern England. The rain will continue to affect the northeast for much of the night but any showers elsewhere will ease.

Outlook for Wednesday and Thursday:

Wednesday will be the driest day of the week for many, with some sunny spells and light winds. Rain will move into the southwest later in the day though, with heavy outbreaks of rain expected to move north-eastwards through Thursday.
