Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
The overnight rain will clear eastwards this morning. then it'll be mostly dry with sunny spells, though some showers are likely in the north. Further rain will reach the far southwest later, then push northeastwards overnight, affecting southern England, Wales and much of Northern Ireland.

Outlook for Monday and Tuesday:

After a bright start in the north and east tomorrow, the cloud and rain will extend to all but the Northern Isles through the day. The rain should be largely confined to Scotland by Tuesday, though some rain may linger in the far southeast as well. Elsewhere it'll be mainly dry with sunny spells.
