Lingering rain will clear Scotland during the morning, however it will remain a dry but rather cloudy day for many, with only limited brighter spells. The best of these in the east. However rain and strong winds will spread across western parts later in afternoon, with coastal and upland gales. Feeling warm, especially in any sunny spells.

Outlook for Saturday and Sunday:
Overnight rain will clear all except the far southeast on Saturday with further heavy showers following into the west. Remaining windy on Sunday with further showers across the UK, however these will remain heaviest in the northwest, with temperatures closer to normal.
