++ Valid for broadcast at 0858

Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
Windy, with showers in the north, particularly in western and northern Scotland, where gales and wintry showers are expected. Elsewhere, a mostly cloudy day, with brightness in the east. By evening, rain will reach the southwest and quickly push across southern parts, clearing the east by dawn. Further north, drier and clearer spells with easing winds.

Outlook for Tuesday and Wednesday:

Over the next few days, bands of rain will continue to affect most areas, with some heavy downpours possible. Away from the rain, brighter and drier intervals may develop. Feeling cool in the north on Tuesday, more mild further south with strengthening gusty winds.
