++ Valid for broadcast at 0858

Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
Eastern areas mostly dry with some bright spells and a little sunshine, although a few showers are possible during the afternoon. More generally cloudy and windy over western areas, with some occasional rain, and with rain becoming more persistent and heavier later over exposed coasts and hills.

Outlook for Tuesday and Wednesday:

Cloudy generally Tuesday, with some occasional rain developing across many parts, although most of it light. However over northern and western coasts and hills the rain will be heavy at times and also windy. On Wednesday some rain persisting over eastern England but sunnier elsewhere, although showers will affect the northwest.
