++ Valid for broadcast at 0858

Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
Any showery rain will ease to leave a largely fine day with sunny spells for most. Winds will increase in the far northwest with heavier rain arriving by evening. This wet and windy weather will sink southeastwards overnight, reaching all but southeastern areas by dawn. It will turn chilly ahead of the rainband but with milder conditions elsewhere.

Outlook for Wednesday and Thursday:
Rain will continue to move southwards on Wednesday but will still affect southern areas by the evening. It will be a mild but windy day with gales in the north. Rain will clear on Thursday with breezy but sunnier conditions to follow.
