++ Valid for broadcast at 0858

Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
Scotland and Northern Ireland will have sunshine followed by cloud and rain and it will be windy too with gale in the far north. Meanwhile, there will be low cloud and some patchy rain across the south-east England at first, however this will quickly clear to leave a fine and warm day for much of England and Wales.

Outlook for Monday and Tuesday:

Over the next few days it will become fresher for all areas with cool north-westerly winds gradually easing. Monday will see sunshine and scattered showers for many, but by Tuesday many will have a drier day although rain will continue further north.
