It will be a dry and bright start for most of the UK, but a squally spell of rain will move northeastwards across England, Wales and probably southern Scotland around the middle of the day. It will be brighter elsewhere with a few showers but parts of Northern Ireland and northeastern Scotland should have a mostly dry day.

Outlook for Sunday and Monday:
Much of the UK will be fine on Sunday, with lighter winds and a few showers, these mainly affecting coastal areas. However, wet and windy weather will make its way eastwards across the UK on Monday. Temperatures will stay around average.
