Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
After a dry, chilly start in the north and east, rain and breezy conditions will slowly spread northeastwards, the rain heavy at times over the south. Bright spells and showers in Scotland. Tonight, rain or drizzle in many parts. Some drier spells for a time across southern England, but sharp showers possible later.

Outlook for Wednesday and Thursday:

A little warmer on Wednesday with some sunny spells but showers are likely, heavy and thundery in places. More prolonged rain will push north across Scotland, most persistent in the east. Thursday will be rather cool, windy and very unsettled, with rain spreading across the country.
