Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
Rain spreading to most northern parts of Britain today, some of the rain heavy, accompanied by increasingly strong southwest winds. A few sunny spells developing over central and eastern England. Rain spreading south and east overnight, with squally showers in the north, and with severe gales developing in the far northwest.

Outlook for Thursday and Friday:

A little rain in the southeast early Thursday, and with showers in the north, some of these heavy or prolonged, especially over Scotland. Elsewhere mainly dry and bright with some sunny periods. Blustery, heavy showers developing more widely on Friday.
