++ Valid for broadcast at 0858

Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
A colder day than yesterday, particularly in the south. Most places dry, although with some showers possible on or around eastern, and some western, coasts. Generally bright and sunny, although with perhaps a little more cloud further west. Turning cold overnight, with cloud and rain arriving in north-west Scotland.

Outlook for Thursday and Friday:

Dry and bright at first on Thursday for England and Wales, but becoming unsettled during the afternoon and overnight, with cloud and rain across Scotland spreading into England and Wales. This clearing to the south-east on Friday, but with showers following behind and becoming breezy in places. Continuing to feel cold.
