Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
Rain will clear the south-east to leave a day of sunny spells and blustery showers for all, particularly for northern parts of the UK where showers will turn thundery. Drier further south and east, but it will feel cool. Overnight, showers will continue to affect north and western parts, meanwhile it turns drier elsewhere with clear spells developing.

Outlook for Saturday and Sunday:
Saturday sees further sunshine and scattered blustery showers, mainly in the north-west, extending to other areas through the day. Turning drier for a time on Sunday, perhaps with some rain in the south and showers over Scotland, as winds ease.
