

Forecast For The United Kingdom
Issued by Met Office Exeter
at 0700 on Tuesday 04 Mar 2014

++ Valid for broadcast at 0858

Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
Most places will have a generally dry day, although rain is likely for a time in the far southwest, whilst parts of Scotland will see outbreaks of rain and hill snow through the day and night. Much of the UK will stay dry overnight, with frost, some ice and patchy fog for England and Wales.

Outlook for Wednesday and Thursday:
Outbreaks of showery rain in the northwest should gradually extend across the northern half of the UK through Wednesday. Elsewhere should remain dry, with the best of the sunshine in the southeast. Thursday should be breezy and cloudy with some rain or drizzle at times,.

(C) Crown Copyright 2014. Published by the Met Office.